Riverside City Manager Scott Barber has picked a Fullerton administrator to fill his old job as community development director, it was announced Wednesday, May 30.

Al Zelinka is Fullerton's community development director and has worked in the field for the public and private sectors for more than 20 years, according to a Riverside city news release. In Riverside, Zelinka will oversee the building, planning code enforcement and development departments.

Barber, named city manager in December, has vowed to focus on attracting businesses and jobs to improve the city's economy. Zelinka's experience in those areas helped make him the top candidate, the news release said.

Zelinka's new salary was not immediately available. City building official Dan Chudy has served as interim community development director and will return to his regular position.
